If Republicans repeal the Affordable Care Act, there may be unintended consequences. A study found that Massachusetts health reform (which was a model for Obamacare) increased the birth rate among married women ages 20 to 34 in Massachusetts by around 1 percent, as births became more affordable. Meanwhile, the birth rate among unmarried women of the same age group decreased by around 8 percent, as contraception became more affordable. In other words, relatively more babies were born in wedlock than out of it.

Tough with diversity

In all-white counties, an analysis of nationwide survey data found, people with an authoritarian mindset — as measured by strict parenting beliefs — were no more intolerant (on political, racial, or immigration matters) than non-authoritarians, after controlling for other factors. However, in more diverse counties, authoritarians became more intolerant, while non-authoritarians became less intolerant. This pattern was confirmed in a
